

APMEN

Asia-Pacific Migration and Environment Network

The Asia-Pacific Migration and Environment Network (APMEN) is a new online information sharing platform on climate change, environment and migration issues created by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) and the International Organization for Migration (IOM).

APMEN brings together in one place the latest information on migration and the environment in Asia and the Pacific. It offers a free virtual space for exchange and learning on migration and environment through an up-to-date research and regional information sharing tool.

APMEN has several distinct features:

- a publicly accessible publications database, regional country information, events calendar and gallery of photos and videos related to migration and environment.
- an exclusive forum where researchers and key opinion leaders can take part in knowledge sharing and discussion on migration and the environment.
- an onsite sharing tool for registered members to easily post related news, events, photos, videos and publications.

Visit APMEN at <http://www.apmen.iom.int/en/> to register as a network member and begin sharing new research, news, events and more.

For further information, please contact Frank Laczko,
Head, Migration Research Division, IOM Geneva flaczko@iom.int

International Organization for Migration (IOM)

