Global Observatory presents PlanetCall: Solutions from Global Youth

PlanetCall.org presents the best architects of a better world - global youth. On December 11, witness young people from around the world take up the challenge of presenting their solutions for a sustainable future to a high profile expert panel of judges for feedback. Listen to their three-minute pitches, hear the results of an exclusive youth survey revealed, and watch as a Declaration, backed by youngsters from 125 countries, is handed to Connie Hedegaard, European Commissioner for the Climate and Danish Minister for COP15 (TBC).

IN THE PANEL

PlanetCall.org is an invitation to young people to become co-architects of their future. PlanetCall is about sustainable solutions, and our generation's willingness to embrace a low-carbon future. Our world is made smaller by the Internet, giving us the power to connect with so many more people. This is exactly what is needed to create innovation and sustainable solutions. On PlanetCall.org, you demonstrate your willingness to take part in building this sustainable future by doing three things: Signing the Declaration; Posting a Call; Forwarding on, asking all those you know to do the same.

PlanetCall is an initiative of the Copenhagen Climate Council and Monday Morning, Scandinavia's leading independent think tank.

The Global Observatory (GO) is communicating climate change – answering the questions: "What is going on?" and "Why is it important?" Climate change is both the most pressing challenge and opportunity: it is central to security, social justice, economic growth, and the heritage we are leaving for our children. As a strategic media hub for news, analysis, and opinion, GO leaders and experts provide news, analysis, and opinion, with content for broadcast, print, and online media. The stakes are too high, the repercussions too vast and personal, for us to not have the opportunity to be involved. www.global-observatory.org
